Dear Hiring Manager,

Regional Sales Manager roles in crop protection in Germany need someone who can own a region, grow a portfolio and keep distributors, retailers and farmers aligned on clear targets. With 3+ years in crop protection sales and regional marketing at Bharat Certis AgriScience and a PGDM in Agricultural Business and Plantation Management, I bring hands-on experience in territory growth, channel development and product launches that fits this scope.

In my current role as Marketing Manager in Bellary, I lead regional marketing for a crop protection portfolio together with seven Territory Managers across paddy, grapes, chilli and cotton. I plan and execute go to market programmes such as farmer meetings, field days, demonstrations, jeep campaigns and agri-fair participation, delivering more than 450 trainings and 120 large events in a season. These activities build farmer trust, strengthen dealer conviction and give sales teams concrete stories backed by trial data.

Previously, as Territory Sales Manager, I owned end to end sales for my territory, managing distributors, retailers and farmer activation. Annual plans and schemes grew portfolio sales from 100 lakhs to 250 lakhs between 2021–22 and 2023–24. Launches such as Kocide and Toki scaled from a small base to 2,000 kilograms and 16,000 kilograms by focusing on the right crops, seasons and key dealers. Man of the Collection and divisional topper awards reflect disciplined overdue control below three percent and consistent in-season execution.

This mix of regional marketing and territory ownership matches typical “Gebietsleiter / Regional Sales Manager – Pflanzenschutz” expectations, where one person is responsible for turnover, margin and field implementation of marketing strategy. My work already combines distributor management, retailer development, field force coaching and farmer focused market development, supported by crop calendars, clear activity plans and regular reviews with sales and finance.

I am preparing for a move to Germany and open to roles across crop protection sales, regional key account management and field marketing. English is at full professional level; German is at intermediate working level (B1, in progress). I would welcome the opportunity to support your growth in Germany by building strong regional performance, stable distributor relations and long term farmer loyalty.

Sincerely,
Rama Krishna Pamarthi
