Dear Hiring Manager,

GMP production sites in Germany expect consistent shop-floor discipline, GDP-compliant documentation, and clear coordination between Production and Quality. That is the type of environment I have supported through hands-on line clearance, daily cGMP rounds, and controlled batch documentation practices. The focus stays on preventing deviations, keeping records inspection-ready, and ensuring every handoff remains traceable.

At M/s Global Calcium, work centered on maintaining GMP compliance during routine production operations. Line clearance and in-process checks were executed to avoid mix-ups and ensure readiness before start-up. BMR/BPR reviews were completed every week alongside analytical report checks, with logbooks maintained to match GDP expectations for accuracy, legibility, and traceability. I coordinated validation sampling with Production and QC, ensured correct labeling, and protected chain-of-custody during sample movement, controls that directly reduce audit findings and rework risk.

Audit readiness required more than “being prepared” on paper. Documentation gaps were closed quickly to support cGMP expectations and certification audits such as Halal, FSSC, and Kosher. Checklists and logbooks were governed with a practical approach: confirm completion, verify signatures, and keep records consistent with SOP requirements. Equipment readiness was also supported through calibration-status checks and preventive maintenance review so production teams could act early, not after a deviation occurred.

Administrative experience adds strength where regulated operations often fail: coordination and follow-through. At ARUDHRA Institute, schedules for 10+ trainers were managed, calendars and attendance were maintained, and high-volume enquiries were handled with structured follow-up. I reduced enquiry turnaround by 30% while keeping communication clear and logged, which translate well into deviation follow-ups, documentation closure, and cross-team coordination in GMP operations.

German language capability at B1 supports shop-floor communication and document handling in bilingual environments, while English at C1 supports SOP comprehension, audit conversations, and structured reporting. I am open to relocation and ready to contribute in roles such as GMP Documentation Associate, QA Operations Support, Production Compliance, or Validation Support in regulated manufacturing.

Sincerely,

Kanthraj M
